

Marco Polo – The Label of Discovery

Since its launch in 1982, the Marco Polo label has for twenty years sought to draw attention to unexplored repertoire. Its main goals have been to record the best music of unknown composers and the rarely heard works of well-known composers. At the same time it aspired, like Marco Polo himself, to bring something of the East to the West and of the West to the East.

For many years Marco Polo was the only label dedicated to recording rare repertoire. Most of its releases were world première recordings of works by Romantic, Late Romantic and Early Twentieth Century composers, and of light classical music.

One early field of exploration lay in the work of later Romantic composers, whose turn has now come again, particularly those whose careers were affected by political events and composers who refused to follow contemporary fashions. Of particular interest are the operas by Richard Wagner's son Siegfried, who ran the Bayreuth Festival for so many years, yet wrote music more akin to that of his teacher Humperdinck. To Der Bärenhäuter (The Man in the Bear's Skin), Banadietrich, Schwarzschwanenreich (The Kingdom of the Black Swan), and Bruder Lustig, which further explores the mysterious medieval world of German legend. Other German operas included in the catalogue are works by Franz Schreker and Hans Pfitzner. Earlier Romantic opera is represented by Weber's Peter Schmoll, and by Silvana, the latter notable in that the heroine of the title remains dumb throughout most of the action. Marschner's Hans Heiling is also listed. A more modern idiom is heard in the Italian composer Azio Corghi's setting of a German libretto by the Nobel prize-winner José Saramago, Divara – Wasser und Blut (Divara – Water and Blood), based on the 16th century Anabaptist seizure of Münster and its consequences. Other rarities in the catalogue include the Basque opera Amaya by Jesús Guridi, sung in Basque, and, to complement Adolphe Adam's ballet La jolie fille de Gand, the same composer's La filleule des fées, both, like Giselle, vehicles for the dancer Carlotta Grisi.

The list of film-scores, expertly reconstructed from surviving sources, grows ever longer. Auric's score for Cocteau's Orphée (Orpheus) and for La Belle et la Bête (Beauty and the Beast), the English composer Philip Sainton's Moby Dick and Erik Nordgren's music for films by Ingmar Bergman, are joined by Deutsch's score for The Maltese Falcon. In addition to music by Hollywood composers, from Poland comes film music by the prolific Wojciech Kilar, with his scores for Bram Stoker's Dracula and Roman Polanski's Death and the Maiden, and from Russia the music written by Shostakovich for The Fall of Berlin.

North America is increasingly left to Marco Polo's loyal companion, Naxos, but Latin America is represented in particular by recordings of the complete piano music of the Argentine composer Luis Gianneco. In addition to earlier releases of music by Spanish and Catalan composers, come recordings of works by Josep Soler and Joaquim Homs.

Marco Polo has always shown significant attention to lighter music. Evidence of this is to be heard in the incredible series of recordings that offers the complete instrumental works of Johann Strauss the Younger, now followed by those of his almost equally prolific brother Josef (on 26 CDs). To these may be added the growing series devoted to the work of the Danish Strauss, Hans Christian Lumbye, to the overtures and instrumental works of Suppé, and to the dance music of the Viennese Carl Ziehrer. The listings of British Light Music also continue to expand, with new additions to the catalogue.

It is only right that Marco Polo should find itself in modern China with a series of recordings for more general release. These include some compositions for Chinese instruments or for a collaboration of East and West in music that lay at the whole origin of the Marco Polo label.

All this is in addition to the original core of Marco Polo exploration in region after region. The Russian romanticism of Liadov, the music of Ukraine, the achievement of Enescu in Romania, of Szymanowski in Poland, of Bruneau, Rabaud, Ibert, and the Boulanger sisters in France, with Fanelli's rare tribute to Théophile Gautier, of Flemish composers, of Braga Santos in Portugal and of Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Respighi, Malipiero, Pizzetti and, rarer still, Garofalo in Italy, all combine into a catalogue of amazing richness. Marco Polo leads the way. It is for eager listeners to follow.

ADAM, Adolphe (1803 – 1856)

The son of the founder of the French school of piano playing, Louis Adam, Adolphe Adam established a reputation for himself in Paris as a composer for the theatre, for vaudeville, opera and ballet. His name is widely known for the popular ballet Giselle of 1841, which was immediately followed by La Jolie fille de Gand (The Beauty of Ghent) and in 1849 by La Filleule des fées (The Fairies' God-Daughter), all successful vehicles for the dancer Carlotta Grisi.

ALKAN, Charles-Valentin (1813 – 1888)

Alkan was a virtuoso pianist of astonishing gifts, although he retired early from normal concert life, becoming something of a recluse. As a composer he has been largely underestimated, but wrote a large amount of piano music, much of which makes extreme demands on the technique of a performer, expanding the possibilities of the instrument in a remarkable series of studies.

ARENSKY, Anton Stepanovich (1861 – 1906)

A pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov in St Petersburg, Arensky joined the teaching staff of the Moscow Conservatory, where his pupils included Glière, Scriabin and Rachmaninov. He succeeded Rimsky-Korsakov as director of the Imperial Chapel in St Petersburg in 1894 and after his resignation in 1901 turned his principal attention to composition. The best known of his works is the D minor Piano Trio and many of his shorter compositions for piano remain familiar. He was a gifted pianist himself and a conductor. His compositions include three operas, two symphonies and concertos for both piano and violin, as well as a set of orchestral variations on a theme of Tchaikovsky, a friend who exercised some influence over his work.

ARNOLD, Malcolm (b. 1921)

Among the most gifted and versatile of English composers, Malcolm Arnold enjoyed an earlier career as a trumpet-player, before turning in 1948 to a career as a composer. As well as his symphonies, other orchestral works and chamber music, he found a ready outlet for his abilities in the writing of film music. His eighty or so film scores include the music for The Bridge on the River Kwai and The Inn of the Sixth Happiness. His scores for David Copperfield and for The Roots of Heaven are characteristic examples of the kind of work for which he was, at one stage in his career, very much in demand, until he decided that his talents needed to be concentrated on concert music.

AUBERT, Louis François Marie (1877 – 1968)

The French pianist and composer Louis Aubert studied composition under Fauré and was briefly an organ pupil of Widor. As a boy chorister he sang at the Madeleine in Paris and after the turn of the century devoted himself increasingly to composition rather than performance as a concert-pianist. His colourful symphonic poem Habanera won immediate success at its first performance in 1919.

AURIC, Georges (1899 – 1983)

A member of Les Six in post-war Paris, Georges Auric wrote for Diaghilev music with the characteristic clarity of his French contemporaries, moving, in a prolific career, to music of greater complexity, while continuing to write with a certain lightness of touch. His compositions include a quantity of dramatic music, with film scores and a varied range of chamber, orchestral and vocal music. La Belle et la Bête and Orphée represent collaborations in the cinema with Cocteau, and Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel, with music by Auric and his colleagues from Les Six, explores a surreal concept by the same writer.

AVSHALOMOFF, Aaron (1895 – 1964)

Born in the Siberian city of Nikolayevsk in 1895, Aaron Avshalomoff became familiar with the sounds of China there, before making his escape east in 1917. He spent much of his life thereafter in China, working to provide a synthesis between Western and Chinese music. In 1947 he moved to the United States to join his musician son. His own music combines Chinese influences with Western techniques.

BABADJANIAN, Arno (1921 – 1983)

Born in the Armenian city of Erevan, Arno Babadjanian studied in Moscow, later returning to teach at the Erevan Conservatory. He is relatively conservative in musical language, with elements suggesting Khachaturian, Rachmaninov and Prokofiev, by turns, but identifiably Armenian in his musical terms of reference.

BALAKIREV, Mili Alexeyevich (1837 – 1910)

Balakirev, a self-appointed leader of the Russian Mighty Handful, the group of five Russian nationalist composers, has been overshadowed by his colleagues Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin and Mussorgsky, if not by César Cui. He was a prolific and more than competent composer in various genres. Best known of his works is the virtuoso piano piece Islamey, one of a number of compositions for the keyboard, including a set of Mazurkas and three Scherzi, suggesting a debt to Chopin overtly acknowledged in his orchestral Chopin Suite.

BANTER, Harald (b. 1930)

Harald Banter has won a reputation in Germany as a producer and broadcaster, as a pioneer in German jazz and as a composer, writing music of avowedly serious intent in which he explores deeper veins of musical experience. This last is particularly evident in his Phädra, inspired by the cellist Maria Kliegel and depicting the tragedy of the legendary Phaedra of the title.

BARGIEL, Woldemar (1828 – 1897)

Woldemar Bargiel was the son of Marianne Tromlitz, first wife of Friedrich Wieck and mother of Clara Schumann, and was taught by Moscheles and Niels W. Gade in Leipzig, before returning to his native Berlin, where he was later appointed professor of composition at the invitation of Joachim. His music is influenced by Schumann, who regarded him as one of the leading composers of the younger generation.

Composer, guitarist and violinist, Ángel Barrios was the son of the famous flamenco guitarist Antonio Barrios. He studied in Granada, Madrid and Paris and in Granada once more won a reputation as a performer with his Trio Iberia of guitar, lute and bandurria, providing his friend Manuel de Falla with a link to the world of flamenco. His compositions belong essentially to the music of Granada.

The Irish composer Gerald Barry offers a considerable challenge to audiences in the musical idiom he has made his own, composing works with a wide frame of reference, as, for example, in his Chevaux-de-frise, based on thematic material derived from the ships of the Spanish Armada, wrecked on the coast of Ireland.

BARTÓK, Béla (1881 – 1945)

Bartók remains one of the most important composers of the twentieth century, with an individual musical language that absorbed and transformed material from his researches with his friend Kodály into the folk-music of Hungary and surrounding regions. Distinguished also as a pianist, Bartók made a number of interesting transcriptions of earlier music for the keyboard, a reflection of another aspect of his genius.

BAX, Arnold (1883 – 1953)

Much influenced by the Irish poet W. B. Yeats, Arnold Bax identified strongly with the Celtic, expressed in his work as a composer in an easily assimilable musical language. Bax wrote a considerable amount of orchestral music and scores for the theatre and cinema, including music for the 1948 film of Dickens's Oliver Twist. His Celtic preoccupations appear in a number of tone poems, including Tintagel and The Garden of Fand, and in many of his songs.

The Slovak composer Ján Levoslav Bella, ordained priest in 1866, was associated with the Cecilian movement in his native country, later leaving the priesthood to become director of music in Hermannstadt, now Sibiu in modern Romania, with its then considerable German population. In the next forty years he established a reputation as a conductor and composer, respected by his contemporaries Brahms, Hans von Bülow, Joachim, Dohnányi and others and writing music that at times echoes Liszt or Schumann and at times is overtly Slovak.

BENJAMIN, Arthur (1893 – 1960)

Born in Australia, Arthur Benjamin made his career largely in England, where he studied and later taught. He won some fame as a composer of light music, notably for pieces of Caribbean or Latin American inspiration, but coupled this with work of much more serious intent. While generally cheerful in musical temperament, his Symphony reflects a more sombre side to his work.

BENOIT, Peter (1834 – 1901)

The Belgian composer Peter Benoit was a pupil of Fétis at the Brussels Conservatory, winning the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1857 and subsequently moving to Paris as conductor at the Bouffes-Parisiens. Returning to Belgium, he founded in Antwerp the Flemish Music School, later the Royal Flemish Conservatory of Music. As a composer he aimed to create a school of Flemish music comparable to the national achievements of Liszt, Berlioz and Wagner.

BERNERS, Lord (1883 – 1950)

Largely self-taught as a composer, Lord Berners was a figure of marked eccentricity and notable for his wide, if dilettante, cultural interests and abilities as a writer, painter and composer. His compositions, often satirical in intention, include a ballet for Dyagilev and ballets for Sadler's Wells, with songs and orchestral and piano pieces that often demonstrate the same sharply perceptive if whimsical humour.

The violinist and composer Franz Berwald has some claim to pre-eminence among Swedish composers, with three of his four mature symphonies written in the 1840s, at the height of his career. He turned his attention to chamber music in the decade from 1849, with compositions that include four attractive piano trios.

Seóirse Bodley was born in Dublin in 1933 and studied at the Royal Irish Academy of Music and at University College, Dublin, spending the years from 1957 to 1959 in Stuttgart, where he studied with Johann Nepomuk David. He returned to Dublin to take up a position at University College. Active as a conductor and accompanist, he has coupled an interest in contemporary trends in music with a study of Irish folk-music and of traditional Gaelic singing. Bodley's Symphony No. 4 includes Irish elements in a modern context, while Symphony No. 5 was written to mark the Limerick Treaty and the preceding historical sieges and conflicts.

Louis-Albert Bourgault-Ducoudray studied in Nantes and in 1862 won the Prix de Rome. He was among the first musicians to introduce French audiences to the exotic, from both the popular and the classical domain. Rapsodie cambodgienne, written in 1882, with the subtitle Khnénh Préavossa (The Feast of Water), is a colourful oriental rhapsody, making use of themes from Cambodia, much as the Russian nationalists had turned to exotic musical material.

BOYDELL, Brian (1917 – 2000)

Born in Dublin and educated at Cambridge and Heidelberg, at the Royal College of Music in London and at the Dublin Royal Irish Academy, Brian Boydell played a leading part in the development of music in Ireland as a conductor, composer, teacher and adviser. His very varied works are generally tonal but by no means conventional in their terms of reference or musical treatment, exploring scale material of different kinds and modal writing that reflects the national Irish origin of his inspiration.

BRETÓN, Tomás (1850 – 1923)

A native of Salamanca, Tomás Bretón rose from relatively humble circumstances to become a leading figure in Spanish music, director of the Madrid Conservatory and an important conductor. His chamber music, unlike his orchestral works, is not obviously Spanish in inspiration but written in a much more international style, drawing inspiration from both Vienna and Paris.

BRIAN, Havergal (1876 – 1972)

The English composer Havergal Brian, in a long career, made little concession to the practical economies of performance in a series of orchestral compositions on a grand scale, including 32 symphonies, many of which were for long denied professional performance. The massive Gothic Symphony, the first of these, was written between 1919 and 1927 and includes a setting of the Te Deum. The last symphony was written in 1968. Havergal Brian's works are now at last winning a hearing, after earlier neglect. His musical language is complex but tonal and however eccentric he is never less than impressive.

BRIDGE, Frank (1879 – 1941)

Frank Bridge, the much respected teacher of Benjamin Britten, was a distinguished viola-player and, as a composer, initially in the romantic tradition. His Cello Sonata marks a period of transition towards a much more radical style, the result of his despair at the uselessness of war.

The name of Alfred Bruneau must be associated particularly with that of the novelist Zola, his collaborator in a number of successful operas, in a French version of the realism current in contemporary opera in Italy. Bruneau wrote a quantity of vocal music, in addition to his music for the theatre, with orchestral music that often demonstrates the influence of Wagner.

Hans von Bülow, distinguished as a pianist and as a conductor, became a piano pupil of Liszt, whose daughter Cosima he married, and was encouraged as a conductor by Wagner, who married Cosima after her divorce from her first husband. Von Bülow's compositions for piano are technically demanding, as befits one of Liszt's most distinguished pupils.

Born in Florence, Castelnuovo-Tedesco, who was of Jewish origin, moved to the United States in 1939. He was one of the most prolific Italian composers of his generation and wrote a considerable quantity of music in an attractive idiom. Among his most successful compositions are his Shakespeare songs, written in the 1920s, and followed by settings of a number of Shakespeare sonnets in later years.

CIMAROSA, Domenico (1749 – 1801)

Trained in Naples, where he was employed as a successful composer of comic opera and a member of the court chapel, Cimarosa also won a wider name for himself, serving at court in St Petersburg and later in Vienna, before returning to Naples. There he sided with Republicans and was briefly imprisoned when the monarchy was restored. He spent his last days in Venice. A near contemporary of Mozart, he wrote attractive and successful music for the theatre, exemplified in the overtures to his oepas.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, Samuel (1875 – 1912)

Born in London, the son of a doctor from Sierra Leone and an English mother, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor is best known for his settings of Longfellow's poem Hiawatha and by his orchestral Petite suite de concert, which also appeared in a popular keyboard version. His style has been compared to that of Dvořák and he shared at least with that composer a source of inspiration in Longfellow.

COWEN, Frederic Hymen (1852 – 1935)

Well known in his time as a conductor, pianist and composer, Frederic Cowen was once known as 'the English Schubert' for his contribution to English song. He regarded himself as a symphonist, with six symphonies to his credit, but excelled in lighter music, exemplified in the concert overture The Butterfly's Ball, inspired by a well known children's poem. More exotic is his Indian Rhapsody, first performed at the Hereford Festival in 1903.

CUI, César (1835 – 1918)

A member of the Five, the Mighty Handful of Russian nationalist composers led by Balakirev, César Cui enjoyed a public career as a professor of military fortification. He was well known as a music critic, his harsh judgements as depressing to Tchaikovsky as they later were to Rachmaninov. As a composer he was happier in smaller forms, where he reached a level of achievement not equalled in his ambitious operas. Shorter orchestral works include four attractive suites.

DE GREEF, Arthur (1862 – 1940)

The Belgian pianist and composer Arthur De Greef enjoyed a very considerable reputation in the former capacity, as a pupil of Liszt and later of Saint-Saëns and a brilliant virtuoso performer. As a composer De Greef shows a generally romantic temperament, with piano concertos as a vehicle for his own virtuosity and other compositions that reflect his background and character. His Piano Concerto No. 1 was dedicated to Saint-Saëns, who expressed great enthusiasm about the work, while Piano Concerto No. 2 follows a programme of anguish, separation and renewed hope.

His Violin Concerto is based on a story by E.T.A. Hoffmann, while his Oboe Concerto features the soloist as an exile from an often aggressive orchestra.

DEBUSSY, Claude (1862 – 1918)

Claude Debussy occupies a position of central importance not only in the music of his native France but in the development of music in the twentieth century. While much of his piano music is very well known, less familiar are transcriptions for piano that he made largely as a student. These include, in particular, arrangements for Nadezhda von Meck, the patroness and confidante of Tchaikovsky, in whose family Debussy spent holiday periods as teacher of her younger children and house-musician. His Prix de Rome competition entry Le Printemps deserves attention as more than a curiosity, while The Girl with the Flaxen Hair, originally a piano piece, is popular in a variety of arrangements.

DELIUS, Frederick (1862 – 1934)

Born in the northern English city of Bradford into a family of German origin, Delius seems a quintessentially English composer, in spite of his musical training in Leipzig and his subsequent long residence in France. Less well known than his rhapsodic celebrations of England are his American Rhapsody, recalling a period spent as an orange-grower in Florida, and Paa Vidderne, inspired by Ibsen, evidence of Delius's friendship with Grieg.

Paul Dessau enjoyed early distinction in Germany as a conductor, subsequently developing his gifts as a composer. Political circumstances led him to move to Paris in 1933 and in 1939 to the United States of America, where he continued an earlier collaboration with Brecht and worked as a film composer in Hollywood. He returned to East Germany in 1948, and worked further with Brecht, as well as contributing notably to a variety of musical genres.

He found his true vocation in music for the cinema, working for Warner Bros and, from 1948, for M-G-M, followed by United Artists. His work for Warner Bros included scores for films such as The Maltese Falcon, High Sierra, The Mask of Dimitrios and Northern Pursuit, released in the early 1940s.

The Belgian violinist Godfried Devreese was a pupil of Ysaÿe and César Thomson. He led the Kurhaus Orchestra in The Hague and was a member of the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam, also working as a conductor in Antwerp and Brussels. He spent some 29 years as director of the Malines Conservatory, establishing the city as an important musical centre. The compositions of Devreese, romantic in general

Donizetti is well known as one of the leading composers of Italian opera, particularly in the period immediately before Verdi's successful Nabucco in 1842, shortly before the staging of Donizetti's final operas. Donizetti's other works include a large number of songs and other vocal compositions, piano music and interesting early chamber music that is very much in the Italian style of the period.

The Czech composer Antonín Dvořák spent the earlier part of his life as a viola-player in the Prague Czech Theatre and during his later career wrote a number of Czech operas which are less often heard abroad than his very familiar symphonies, concertos and chamber music. Maurice Emmanuel was at first a pupil of Delibes at the Paris Conservatoire, but disagreement led instead to private lessons with Bizet's friend Guiraud. He later taught history of music at the Conservatoire, showing a particular interest in folk-song and modal music, elements in his own style as a composer. His breadth of interest is shown in three stage-works, two based on Aeschylus and one on Plautus. His wide general interests and detailed knowledge of the history of Western music are reflected in his two symphonies and other orchestral works, with a second Breton symphony based on the legend of the submerged kingdom of le roi d'Ys.

ERKEL, Ferenc (1810 – 1893)

Descended from a family resident for generations in the then Hungarian city of Pozsony (the modern Slovakian capital Bratislava), Ferenc Erkel was a leading figure in Hungarian music in a period of growing national fervour. This is evident in his piano music, much of it written in the 1840s, testimony to his own distinction as a pianist.

FAGAN, Gideon (1904 – 1980)

A native of Somerset West in the Cape Province of South Africa, Gideon Fagan was trained in his own country and at the Royal College of Music in London, spending 27 years in England before returning home to take up the position of Manager of the Music Department of the South African Broadcasting Corporation. Well known as a conductor, he also enjoyed a reputation as a composer, making appropriate use in his work of material of African origin.

FANELLI, Ernest (1860 – 1917)

Ernest Fanelli was expelled from the Paris Conservatoire, later returning to study with Delibes, until shortage of money finally compelled him to leave and support himself by work as a percussion-player or pianist. His compositions remained unknown until discovered by Pierné in 1912, 29 years after they were written. His work, prophetic of future music as an isolated forerunner of Debussy, fell into oblivion once more, now to be revived in the present recording of a surviving composition based on a novel by Théophile Gautier.

FARNON, Robert (b. 1917)

Robert Farnon is well known for his contribution to light music. He was born in Canada and served in the Canadian army as conductor of the Canadian Band of the Allied Expeditionary Forces, later settling in England, where he established a reputation as a composer, conductor and arranger. Much of his music will prove very familiar to the listener.

FÄSY, Albert (1837 – 1891)

Born in Zurich in 1837, the son of a department store owner and city councillor, Albert Fäsy studied at Leipzig Conservatory and in Dresden, but won no great success in his lifetime. His ambitious orchestral works, too expensive perhaps for contemporary performance, include a remarkably dramatic picture of the voyage of Columbus and a celebration of the Swiss victory over Austria at Sempach in the 14th century, a vindication of a composer long forgotten, and unheard even in his own time.

FERNSTRÖM, John (1897 – 1961)

The Swedish composer John Fernström spent his early years in China, where he was born, returning at the age of ten to develop his abilities as a musician and painter. A violinist and conductor, he held an important position in music in Sweden, not least as a teacher and director of the Lund Conservatory. His music remains tonal and immediately approachable, not least in his eight string quartets.

FERROUD, Pierre-Octave (1900 – 1936)

The death of the French composer and conductor Pierre-Octave Ferroud in a car accident in 1936 cut short a life of early achievement. His orchestral music shows a debt to Ravel, developing from early descriptive writing to a more abstract style, in a settled tonal musical language.

Born in Munich, where he also studied, Aloys Fleischmann made his home and career in Ireland, notably in Cork, where he had taken his first degree, and where he remained as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra and Professor of Music for the greater part of his life. His music is often overtly Irish in flavour, with Irish elements absorbed into a mature musical idiom that reflected his own background and generally traditional leanings.

FOOTE, Arthur (1853 – 1937)

The American composer, pianist and organist Arthur Foote developed his musical gifts on American soil and in 1875 was awarded the first master's degree in his subject at Harvard University. He was, therefore, a pioneer in American composition, at a time when others would study composition abroad. Among his varied compositions, his chamber music, in many ways typical of its period, is of particular interest.

FRANCK, César (1822 – 1899)

Highly esteemed by his pupils, César Franck eventually became a member of the teaching staff of the Paris Conservatoire, known for his skill in improvisation as an organist and, among his followers, as a composer of unusual genius. The recording of piano music by Franck includes one original work, followed by transcriptions of Franck's organ music made by Harold Bauer and of the well known Violin Sonata arranged for piano by Alfred Cortot.

He won his first success as a composer in Vienna in the 1870s and was held in high esteem by Brahms, who gave him practical encouragement. His chamber and piano music offers a useful introduction to an interesting composer much honoured in his own time.

FUMET, Raphaël (1898 – 1979)

The son of the composer Dynam-Victor Fumet, the French composer Raphaël Fumet wrote much of his music for his son, the virtuoso flautist Gabriel Fumet. A man of independence and modesty, he avoided the fashions and cliques of the French musical establishment, largely employed in teaching in the provinces and making little attempt to promote his music, which is only now becoming better known. In style his compositions are tonal and approachable, while his use of one or more flutes in various forms of ensemble shows great originality.

FURTWÄNGLER, Wilhelm (1886 – 1954)

Furtwängler is better known as one of the greatest conductors of the twentieth century than as a composer. His decision to remain in Germany after 1933, when others from Germany took refuge abroad, led to subsequent controversy and accusations of complicity with the National Socialist régime that he had always in fact opposed. His three symphonies continue and extend the earlier Austro-German tradition of Brahms and Bruckner and were written largely during the Hitler period, when there were less demands on him as a conductor.

GARCÍA ABRIL, Antón (b. 1933)

Winner of the 1993 Guerrero Foundation award, the Spanish composer Antón García Abril builds notably on earlier tradition, not least in his ballet score Danza y tronío, which draws on music by Boccherini and Soler. In general he was able to resist the dictates of contemporary musical fashion to form his own musical language, relying on national tradition, but always fresh and new in its inspiration, as in the large scale orchestral Hemeroscopia and the Piano Concerto, the latter one of the best Spanish examples of the form.

GERHARD, Roberto (1896 – 1970)

Of Franco-Swiss descent, Roberto Gerhard was born and had his earlier musical training in Catalonia, seeking exile from Spain only after the republican defeat in the Spanish civil war. His later life was spent in England. As a pupil of Schoenberg, Gerhard derived his later technique from his studies in Vienna, nevertheless often reflecting in his music the Spanish influences that audiences expected from him.

GILSON, Paul (1865 – 1942)

Paul Gilson was at the heart of the Flemish late Romantic symphonic tradition. A contemporary of Debussy, he wrote much of his orchestral music during the first forty years of his life, with a set of Méodies écossaises for large string orchestra to set beside the serenades of Tchaikovsky and Dvořák, a cyclic set of symphonic sketches, The Sea, ominous incidental music for the play Alvar and a dramatic series of Symphonic Overtures.

GLASS, Louis (1864 – 1936)

Recent years have brought an increased interest in the work of the Danish composer Louis Glass, a contemporary of Carl Nielsen, by whom his own achievement has been overshadowed. Glass wrote six symphonies, some with programmatic titles, in addition to a quantity of other orchestral works and chamber music. He was in earlier years a pianist of some distinction, until his career as a performer was brought to a close by illness.

GLAZUNOV, Alexander Konstantinovich (1865 – 1936)

A pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazunov showed astonishing precocity coupled with a phenomenal musical memory. In Russian music he represents a synthesis between the relatively amateur work of the Five and the “German” professionalism of the Conservatories. He became director of the St Petersburg Conservatory in 1905, retaining this position until 1930. In style he is a Russian romantic, prolific and versatile, his gifts as a composer and orchestrator evident in particular in his ballets Raymonda, The Seasons and Ruses d’amour and in a wide range of orchestral works. His compositions for piano offer another aspect of his talents.

GODARD, Benjamin (1849 – 1895)

A pupil of Vieuxtemps, Benjamin Godard enjoyed a career as a violist, but won an even wider reputation as a composer of salon music. He is remembered for the Berceuse from his opera Jocelyn, one of seven such works, but was prolific enough as a composer of chamber, vocal and orchestral music, with two interesting concertos for violin and two for piano. His salon music is, naturally, less substantial in musical content.

GOUNOD, Charles (1818 – 1893)

From the middle of the 19th century Gounod exercised a strong influence over French composers, particularly in the period between his great success with the opera Faust in 1859 and his departure for England on the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War in 1870. He won further operatic success notably with Roméo et Juliette in 1867. He wrote a quantity of church music. Less familiar are his oratorios, which include Tobie (Tobias), written in 1865, and the patriotic Gallia, described as a lamentation, written in 1871, after the French defeat at Sedan.

GUARNIERI, Camargo (1907 – 1993)

The son of a father from Sicily and a Brazilian mother, Camargo Guarnieri established himself as a musician of importance in São Paulo, before moving in 1938 to Paris for lessons with Koehlin. In style he belongs to a third generation of Brazilian composers, after Braga and then Villa-Lobos, with national traits now fully absorbed into a mature and often passionate musical language. His completely violinistic sonatas for violin and piano, Nos. 4-6, written in 1956, 1959 and 1965, are a fascinating addition to duo repertoire.

HILL, Alfred (1870 – 1960)

The Australian composer Alfred Hill studied in Leipzig in the late 1880s, continuing, as a composer, the traditions in which he had been trained, but later with an Australian flavour, with occasional use of aboriginal melodies. His ten numbered symphonies, the last written in 1958, suggest the work of a latter-day Australian Dvořák.

HINDEMITH, Paul (1895 – 1963)

Distinguished as a viola-player and as the deviser of a new school of German composition, Hindemith developed his own musical idiom, often astringent or neo-Baroque in its counterpoint. His piano Interludes and Fugues in the Ludus Tonalis of 1942 are a characteristic example of this style. His views of the place of the composer in society as craftsman led to the composition of a wide variety of "music for use".

HOLBROOKE, Joseph (1878 – 1958)

Joseph Holbrooke, born in Croydon in 1878, was prolific as a composer, often ambitious in the scale of his orchestral works. Ulalume, The Bells and The Raven express his fascination with the poems of Edgar Allan Poe, while other preoccupations appear in his three operas based on the Welsh Mabinogion, the last of which, Bronwen, was first performed in 1929. Neglect of his work is now giving way to renewed interest in a composer of eccentric versatility.

HOLMÈS, Augusta (1847 – 1903)

Augusta Holmès, a French composer of Irish descent, but reputedly the daughter of Alfred de Vigny, her godfather, was a pupil of César Franck. She occupied a leading position in artistic circles in Paris in her time, refusing an offer of marriage from Saint-Saëns and bearing three daughters to the poet Catulle Mendès. As a composer she wrote operas, vocal works and chamber music, with a series of dramatic symphonies that show the influence both of Franck and of Wagner.

HONEGGER, Arthur (1892 – 1955)

Swiss by birth, Honegger is associated with the group of French composers in Paris known as Les Six. He retains an important position as a composer, with his dramatic psalm Le roi David and stage oratorio Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher, a continuing part of modern repertoire. Less familiar are the scores he wrote for early films, including Abel Gance's Napoléon and the 1934 film of Victor Hugo's Les misérables, part of an extensive range of works for the cinema, theatre and radio.

HUMPERDINCK, Engelbert (1854 – 1921)

Celebrated as the composer of the fairy-tale opera Hänsel und Gretel, Humperdinck enjoyed a varied career, in earlier years as an assistant to Wagner at Bayreuth. Other operas in this vein include Dornröschen (Sleeping Beauty) and Königskinder (Children of the King). Collaboration with the director Max Reinhardt in Berlin brought incidental music for a number of plays, including Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

HUSA, Karel (b. 1921)

A native of Prague, Karel Husa studied also in Paris, notably with Honegger and Nadia Boulanger, later settling in the United States. His work as a composer was for some time limited by his distinguished career as a conductor. His musical language successfully combines contemporary harmonic idiom with a neo-classical attention to form and balance. His Music for Prague reflects his reaction to the suppression of newly developing freedom in Prague in 1968.

INDY, Vincent d' (1851 – 1931)

A disciple of César Franck and founder of the influential and rigorous Schola Cantorum in Paris, a rival to the Conservatoire, Vincent d'Indy represented what became a conservative element in French music. His first two string quartets were written in the 1890s, with concert and incidental music ranging from the 1880s to the early years of the new century.

He continues the Russian tradition of Rimsky-Korsakov, with a particular interest in the more exotic elements found in remoter regions of the Soviet Union and neighbouring countries. Local colour is evident in his Caucasian Sketches, Iveria and the Turkish Fragments.

He spent his last eight years in poverty and ill health in the Crimea, although enjoying a growing reputation as a composer. His graphic incidental music for Tsar Boris is effective, with a symphonic poem, The Nymphs, based on Turgenev, The Cedar and the Palm, based on a poem by Heine, and Epic Poem, a colourful orchestral composition.

KOECHLIN, Charles (1867 – 1950)

Koechlin won distinction as a writer on music theory and as a teacher counted Poulenc among his pupils. His reputation as a composer was largely eclipsed by his younger contemporaries, although many of his works won immediate if brief acclaim. His symphonic poems based on Kipling's Jungle Book reveal an aspect of that writer only now becoming understood. Les heures persanes, a set of piano pieces later orchestrated, explores the oriental world of Pierre Loti.

Franz Lachner was a close friend of Schubert in Vienna, but outlived his friend by more than sixty years, to be displaced as General Music Director in Munich by the arrival of Wagner there in 1864. Lachner was a thoroughly competent composer, using a musical language based on a solid classical technique. His orchestral works include eight symphonies, the first written in the year of Schubert's death and the last in 1851. His seven orchestral suites span a period from 1861 to 1881.

Liapunov had Tchaikovsky among his teachers at the Moscow Conservatory, later moving to St Petersburg, where he came under the direct influence of Balakirev, the dictatorial leader of the Russian nationalist Mighty Handful. He taught later at the Conservatory, but left Russia after the Revolution, teaching in Paris until his death in 1924. He wrote extensively for the piano, with an impressive set of Twelve Studies completed in 1905 and a number of character pieces, in which his interest in Russian folksong is often apparent.

LINDBLAD, Adolf Fredrik (1801 – 1878)

An enthusiastic admirer of Beethoven from his days in Hamburg, the Swedish composer Adolf Fredrik Lindblad took lessons in Berlin from Zelter and became a friend of Mendelssohn. He is noted for his contribution to Swedish song, while his symphonies demonstrate a bold command of instrumentation.

English by birth and training, Henry Lissant-Collins made his later career in South Africa, where he was able to pursue his interests in Zulu music. The so-called Fuqoi of the title of the work recorded is a transliteration of the Zulu name for Buller's coucal, a shy bird found in dense bush country.

LORTZING, Albert (1801 – 1851)

Lortzing was associated throughout his career with the theatre and is best remembered for his opera on Peter the Great, Zar und Zimmermann (Tsar and Carpenter). He continues to explore the vein of German Romantic opera opened by Weber's Der Freischütz. The overtures to some of his operas provide an introduction to his compelling style of composition.

LUMBYE, Hans Christian (1810 – 1874)

Influenced by the music of Lanner and of Strauss, the Danish composer and conductor Hans Christian Lumbye became a well-known figure at the Tivoli Gardens in Copenhagen, where he conducted and led his own orchestra in a repertoire of light music to which he made a major contribution as a composer, as he did to the ballets devised by his friend August Bournonville. In the tradition of Vienna, he holds a worthy place by the side of the Strauss family.

LYATOSHYNSKY, Boris (1895 – 1968)

Boris Lyatoshynsky was a leading figure in the musical life of the Ukraine, although his career was seriously affected by the cultural policies of the Soviet Union. He wrote five symphonies, which form only a small part of his work, ranging from opera to chamber music, choral music and songs. His musical language is essentially derived from the music of his own country.

After holding various positions of importance after 1949, he moved, in the 1960s, to the United States. His Second Symphony reflects the struggle of the Red Army and the evocative Song of the Mountain Forest makes use of traditional material.

Edward MacDowell occupied an important position in American music, principally as one of the first American composers to be recognised internationally. He studied in Paris and in Germany, where his teachers included Carl Heymann and Raff and where he had strong encouragement from Liszt, both as pianist and as composer. His compositions include two piano concertos and orchestral works of literary inspiration, with a much larger quantity of piano music and songs.

MALIPIERO, Gian Francesco (1882 – 1973)

The Italian composer and musicologist Gian Francesco Malipiero is well known for his editions of the music of Monteverdi and Vivaldi. Prolific enough as an original composer, he also provided arrangements of music by earlier composers, of which his Vivaldiana is one example. Two sets of Invenzioni (Inventions), the second with the appealing descriptive title La festa degli indolenti (The Feast of the Indolent) introduce music of his own, a sample of a vast range of orchestral and operatic compositions.

MARKEVITCH, Igor (1912 – 1983)

Distinguished as one of the great conductors of the century, Igor Markevitch started his career as a composer, with Stravinsky one of Dyagilev's two Igors. The symphonic poem Le Nouvel Âge recalls the music of his contemporary, Szymanowski. His Sinfonietta reflects the teaching of Nadia Boulanger, while Cinéma-Ouverture is derived from a score intended for a Massine ballet, The Blue Danube. The short Cantique d'Amour is colourful in orchestration, varying in mood from languour to passion. L'Envol d'Icare, with its strange mis-tuning of some instruments, was planned as a ballet with Serge Lifar, a symbolic treatment of the legend of Icarus, while the neo-classical Concerto Grosso makes daring use of the soprano saxophone.

MARSCHNER, Heinrich August (1795 – 1861)

Marschner retains a firm place in German operatic repertoire, while his horror opera Der Vampyr has recently made an unexpected appearance as a television serial. The best of his operas is perhaps Hans Heiling, which deals with the fatal love between an earth-spirit, Hans Heiling, and a mortal woman, a work very much in the tradition of Der Freischütz. The opera was first staged in Berlin in 1833.

MARTIN, Philip (b. 1947)

Born in Dublin, the Irish composer Philip Martin was a pupil of Franz Reizenstein and Louis Kentner in London. His subsequent career has centred on his native city, with important commissioned compositions and appearances as a solo pianist. His Piano Concerto No.2 casts the soloist in the rôle of a Dubliner, as he goes through a day in the city. Beato Angelico draws inspiration from the painter Fra Angelico, while his Harp Concerto mingles joy with sadness.

Medtner studied at the Moscow Conservatory, where he later taught the piano intermittently, before leaving Russia in 1921 to settle first in Paris and then, in 1935, in England, where he remained until his death. Most of Medtner's compositions are for the piano, apart from a large number of songs to Russian texts and a small number of chamber works. Particularly notable are his piano sonatas, some of which, like the Sonata-Skazka (Fairy Tale Sonata) and Sonata-Idylle have explanatory titles. In style his music may be generally compared with that of Rachmaninov, although he writes in a distinctive enough language that is recognizably his own.

MERCADANTE, Saverio (1795 – 1870)

Although his operas have largely disappeared from modern repertory, Mercadante was among the leading Italian composers of his time, a contemporary of Bellini, Donizetti and the rather younger Verdi. His sixty operas, written between 1819 and 1866 offer a conspectus of Italian operatic practice, the context in which his better-known contemporaries worked.

A leading figure in Flemish music, Arthur Meulemans developed a musical language strongly influenced by French impressionism, shown particularly in his orchestral writing. His three operas are evidence of his national interest in the music of his native country, while his abstract Symphony No. 2, written in 1933, is in contrast to the evocative pictures of nature evoked in his romantic and programmatic Symphony No.3, the Fir Symphony and Swan Fen Symphony.

MEYERBEER, Giacomo (1791 – 1864)

French grand opera owes much to the German-Jewish composer Giacomo Meyerbeer, who had his first success in Paris in 1826 with his tenth opera, Il crociato in Egitto (The Crusade in Egypt). From 1831 until his death in 1864 he provided Paris with four notably spectacular grand operas. L'étoile du nord is a work of another kind, a mixture of the comic and the serious and of song and speech, first staged at the Paris Opéra-Comique in 1854. It deals with a romantic episode in the life of Peter the Great, in disguise in Western Europe and in love with a determined canteen-girl, who later, after escape and transitory madness, is restored to her lover, now revealed as the Tsar.

MIASKOVSKY, Nikolai Yakovlevich (1881 – 1950)

Miaskovsky was a friend and mentor of the young Prokofiev at the St Petersburg Conservatory, where he had been taught by Liadov and Rimsky-Korsakov, after private lessons with Glière. His 27 symphonies, spanning a period from 1908 to 1950, encompass and to some extent seek to express the varied fortunes of Russia and the Soviet Union. Another aspect of his work is heard in the nine piano sonatas, which span a similar period.

MOSONYI, Mihály (1815 – 1870)

Like Liszt, the Hungarian composer Mihály Mosonyi was born near the borders of Hungary into a German-speaking family and studied in Pozsony, the modern Bratislava. He spent the later part of his career, some thirty years, in Pest, where he taught the piano and composition, turning his own attention to the composition of truly Hungarian music, an aim in which he enjoyed considerable success. His many works include operas, sacred and secular vocal works, two symphonies and a quantity of piano music of Hungarian inspiration.

MOTTA, Vianna da (1868 – 1948)

The Portuguese pianist and composer José Vianna da Motta studied the piano and composition in Berlin and with Hans von Bülow in Frankfurt. He attended Liszt's final classes in Weimar and his close association with the music of Liszt was to continue after the latter's death in 1886. One of the leading pianists of his time, he finally returned to Portugal in 1917, becoming director of the Lisbon Conservatory in 1919 and doing much to establish there a broader system of musical and cultural education. The influence of Liszt is apparent in his compositions for piano, where Portuguese elements have an increasing part to play.

NEWMAN, Alfred (1901 – 1970)

Alfred Newman took lessons from Schoenberg, but made his career in musical comedy and then in the world of the cinema, providing scores for some 250 films, as head of the 20th Century-Fox music department in Hollywood. His scores range from City Lights to The Greatest Story Ever Told and Airport.

NIN-CULMELL, Joaquín María (b. 1908)

Brother of the writer Anaís Nin and son of the Cuban composer and pianist Joaquín Nin, Joaquín Nin-Culmell was trained in Paris, where he was a pupil of Dukas, later taking lessons from Manuel de Falla. Although long resident in the United States, where he has held important academic positions, he has written music of a markedly Spanish flavour, including a fascinating series of piano pieces, Tonadas, that draw on Spanish material.

NOVÁK, Vítězslav (1870 – 1949)

Vítězslav Novák was a fellow-student of Josef Suk in Dvořák's composition master-class at the Prague Conservatory. Discouraged by other teachers in Prague, he found renewed inspiration in the folk-music of Moravia and Slovakia, which strongly influenced his music. His piano tone-poem Pan, later orchestrated, represents Novák at the height of his powers.

A native of Glasgow and a pupil of Benjamin Frankel, Buxton Orr taught for a number of years at the London Guildhall School of Music, with an interest in jazz and a musical language, as a composer, that combines a tendency towards the tonal with occasional use of serial techniques. His compositions include dramatic works, as well as orchestral, vocal and instrumental compositions of considerable variety.

OSWALD, Henrique (1852 – 1931)

Swiss by descent and Brazilian by birth, Henrique Oswald spent many years in Italy, returning to spend the last twenty years of his life in Rio de Janeiro. His music is strongly influenced by French music of the turn of the century, his own well crafted idiom one of some refinement, particularly evident in his piano pieces and chamber music.

PACINI, Giovanni (1796 – 1867)

A rival of Bellini and Donizetti, Giovanni Pacini outlived both, achieving his greatest success in 1840 with Saffo, based on the life and suicide of the Greek poetess of Lesbos. Described by Rossini as the composer with the most genius in Italy, Pacini here breaks away from the pattern set by Rossini in a work suggesting the influence of Bellini's Norma in its dramatic intensity.

PFITZNER, Hans (1869 – 1949)

Widely known for his opera Palestrina, Hans Pfitzner occupied an important position in German musical life, at least until 1934. His orchestral compositions include a piano concerto, while his 1931 opera Das Herz and the Overture to Das Christ-Ellein, written in 1906, exemplify his work for the theatre.

A pupil of Massenet and Franck at the Conservatoire, Pierné enjoyed a career in Paris as a conductor and as a composer. His music shows a firm technical command, reflecting the eminence of his teachers. This is apparent in his chamber music and works for piano as in his orchestral compositions and works for the theatre.

PILATI, Mario (1903 – 1938)

The death of the Italian composer Mario Pilati at the age of 35 has led to subsequent neglect of a musician of considerable promise and achievement. Encouraged by Pizzetti, he moved from Naples to Milan, but later returned south once more, drawing inspiration from his native region. His Concerto in C is based on the concept of the Baroque concerto grosso, while other works exemplify his original approach to the neo-classical tendencies of the earlier twentieth century.

PIZZETTI, Ildebrando (1880 – 1968)

Ildebrando Pizzetti represents a relatively conservative tendency in the Italian music of the twentieth century, with an early lyrical style developing into a more dramatic language in later works, evident in his chamber music as in much of his other work. His compositions include operas and incidental music for the theatre, a quantity of vocal and orchestral music and a smaller quantity of chamber music. He was also distinguished as a conductor, teacher and writer on musical subjects.

PONCE, Manuel M. (1882 – 1948)

A composer and pianist, Manuel Ponce had his early training in his native Mexico, before further study in Bologna and in Berlin. He started his career in Mexico, followed by a period in Paris, where he benefited from the assistance of Paul Dukas. He established himself once more in Mexico in 1933, writing music that had a wide general appeal and, in particular, providing Andres Segovia with a notable guitar concerto, the Concierto del sur, with other compositions for the instrument. His music in general reflects the traditions of Mexico.

POOT, Marcel (1901 – 1988)

A student at the Brussels Conservatory and then at the Royal Flemish Conservatory in Antwerp, Marcel Poot showed an early interest in music for the cinema. A pupil of Gilson and later of Dukas, he developed a musical idiom that allows ironic effect and is shown at its most cheerful in compositions like the popular Vrolijke ouverture. His varied works include the dramatic, the orchestral, vocal and chamber music.

PORTUGAL, Marcos Antônio (1762 – 1830)

Born in Lisbon, Marcos Antônio Portugal had his musical training and early career there, continuing to write operas from 1792 to 1800 in Naples. He returned to Lisbon, eventually rejoining the exiled court in Rio de Janeiro, where he held a dominant position in musical life until his death. His comic opera Le donne cambiate, another work based on Coffey's play The Devil to Pay, was first staged in Venice in 1797.

POTTER, Archibald James (1918 – 1980)

Archie Potter was born in 1918, the son of a blind Belfast piano-tuner. He won a scholarship to the Royal College of Music where he studied with Vaughan Williams. A highly prolific and distinguished composer who won many awards, he wrote distinctive music that encompasses a wide variety of styles and techniques, always using whatever would best suit his purpose. The Sinfonia "de Profundis" was first performed in 1969. A powerful work, it won a Jacob's Radio Award that year. Other music can be in a lighter vein, combining Irish wit and humour with evocative and poetic orchestration.

Associated with Les Six in Paris in the early 1920s, Francis Poulenc enjoyed a career of great distinction, writing music that at first had an elegant if superficial attraction, before maturity brought greater profundity to his work. Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel was an early collaborative effort with other composers of the group, under the influence of Cocteau.

QUILTER, Roger (1877 – 1953)

The English composer Roger Quilter was a fellow-student of Percy Grainger, Cyril Scott and Balfour Gardner at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt. His reputation in England rests largely on his songs and on his light music for orchestra, such as his Children's Overture, with its interwoven nursery rhyme tunes.

Born in Paris in 1873 into a family that included many distinguished professional musicians, Henri Rabaud studied composition at the Conservatoire with Massenet and Gédalge, later coming under the influence of César Franck and Wagner. Conservative by inclination, in 1922 he succeeded Fauré as director of the Conservatoire, retaining this position for nearly twenty years. His compositions include operas, film music and incidental music for the theatre as well as two symphonies and other orchestral works.

RACHMANINOV, Sergey (1873 – 1943)

Trained at the Moscow Conservatory as a pianist and composer, Rachmaninov had established himself in the second capacity before the Russian Revolution. Exile abroad led him to turn his attention to concert performance as a pianist and as a conductor, leaving much less time for composition. He was one of the most distinguished virtuoso pianists of his time. In addition to his well known orchestral and piano compositions Rachmaninov also made a number of piano transcriptions of his own music and that of others for his own concert use. Compelled to leave Russia after the revolution of 1917, Sergey Rachmaninov established himself abroad as a pianist of remarkable virtuosity, his busy career allowing less time than before for composition. His popular Vocalise, particularly effective in cello transcription, was written in 1912 and revised three years later.

Remembered by an early generation primarily for his popular Cavatina, heard in many arrangements, Raff spent part of his earlier career as assistant to Liszt in Weimar, and ended his life as director of the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt. He wrote eleven symphonies, most of them with some programmatic content, all in the competent style of the period.

RAVEL, Maurice (1875 – 1937)

French, of paternal Swiss and maternal Basque descent, Ravel combined skill in orchestration with meticulous technical command of harmonic resources, writing in an attractive musical idiom that was entirely his own, in spite of contemporary comparisons with Debussy, a composer his senior by some twenty years. Ravel's attempts at the prestigious Prix de Rome were uniformly unsuccessful, as he continually failed, finally, perhaps, deliberately, to satisfy the academic standards of the jury. His five Prix de Rome cantatas are recorded now for the first time. Maurice Ravel had a particular affinity with Spanish music, as exemplified in his popular Habanera, originally for two pianos, but subject to much transcription.

The colourful tone-poems by Respighi, The Fountains of Rome, The Pines of Rome and The Festivals of Rome are well known to concert audiences, brilliant evocations of the city where Respighi had settled in 1913. Respighi's other works deserve a wider audience. These include the Concerto Gregoriano for violin and the Concerto in Modo Misolidio for piano, the Sinfonia Drammatica and works for voice and orchestra that include settings of Shelley, Aretusa, La sensitiva and Il tramonto.

REYNOLDS, Alfred (1884 – 1969)

A pupil of Humperdinck, Alfred Reynolds was, like many other British composers of light music, a man of the theatre. Apart from an orchestral intermezzo, a few dozen songs and a few instrumental miniatures, his considerable output was entirely associated with the stage in one way or another. Flourishing in the period from the Great War to the 1950s, he is less well remembered than many of his contemporaries, although highly regarded in his day. He collaborated with the actor-manager Nigel Playfair and was adept at musical shows, including a popular stage version of 1066 and All That.

One of the Russian nationalist Mighty Handful, Rimsky-Korsakov developed a sound command of orchestral technique, devoting himself entirely to music after service in the Russian navy. Compositions such as Sheherazade and Capriccio Espagnol are very well known to audiences. Less familiar is his Night on Mount Triglav, derived from his opera Plada, and his suite from the opera Pan Voyevoda, colourful additions to general repertoire.

Jean Rivier's career and health were affected by the war of 1914-18. In later years he taught composition at the Paris Conservatoire, alternating with and then replacing Darius Milhaud on the latter's death. His compositions include a number of works that involve the saxophone. Of these the 1955 Concerto for saxophone, trumpet and strings is a fine example.

piano trio, for some twenty years he was a lecturer in music at Oxford. As a composer his individual voice is heard in his eleven symphonies, while his moving Cello Sonata echoes his interest in counterpoint and in the earlier traditions of vocal music.

RUBINSTEIN, Anton (1829 – 1894)

One of the greatest pianists of his day, Anton Rubinstein came to occupy an important position in Russian music with his establishment in 1862 of the St Petersburg Conservatory, the first such institution in Russia. His relationship with the Russian nationalist composers led by Balakirev was hostile, leading him to categorize them as amateur, while they labelled him "German", a reference to the sound technical training given to his students, who included the young Tchaikovsky. As a composer Rubinstein was technically gifted, avoiding the apparent crudity of the nationalists. He wrote a considerable amount of music, including piano concertos, symphonies, operas and compositions for piano, among the last the notorious Melody in F.

Unfairly treated in the play Amadeus and similarly in the previous century by Pushkin, Salieri was, in his own time, a musician of the highest importance, serving for many years as Court Kapellmeister in Vienna. A protégé of Gassmann and then of Gluck, he won considerable success with his operas, particularly in Paris, and was instrumental in the training of many younger musicians, including Beethoven and Schubert. His many compositions include over forty operas, in addition to a large quantity of attractive music of all kinds, in the classical style of Vienna.

SCARMOLIN, Anthony Louis (1890 – 1969)

The Italian-born American composer Scarmolin worked for many years as a teacher, while securing a reputation in particular as a composer of lighter music. He continued to write in a more serious vein and among over a thousand works are operas, tone-poems and other works that have a serious claim on attention.

SCHILLINGS, Max von (1868 – 1933)

Max von Schillings, well known as a conductor, was appointed Intendant of the Berlin Opera in 1918 and during the following seven years before his resignation was responsible for the first performances of important operas by Pfitzner, Schreker, Busoni and Richard Strauss, the last named an important influence on his career. Compositions by Max von Schillings include a brilliant violin concerto, a symphonic prologue to the Oedipus Rex of Sophocles and the opera Moloch, based on a fragment by Friedrich Hebbel.

SCHMIDT, Franz (1874 – 1939)

A cellist under Mahler at the Vienna Court Opera, Franz Schmidt had studied composition under Bruckner and Robert Fuchs and piano with Leschetizky. As a composer Schmidt distinguished himself with his four symphonies and in the opera-house with his first opera Notre Dame. His two clarinet quintets, one with a string quartet and clarinet and the other with a piano quartet and clarinet, make interesting additions to the repertoire of the wind instrument.

SCHMITT, Florent (1870 – 1958)

The French composer Florent Schmitt occupied an important position in French musical life. Of particular interest among a variety of works is his La tragédie de Salomé, written in 1907 as a ballet and treating a subject of particular sensual appeal at the time. Schmitt drew some inspiration from an earlier visit to Istanbul to produce a score of exotic instrumental colour.

SCHOENBERG, Arnold (1874 – 1951)

Schoenberg's theories of composition, an extension of chromaticism to allow an element of equality between all twelve notes included in the scale, presented in a set order, have had a strong influence on composers in the twentieth century, from the work of his pupils Berg and Webern onwards. Born in Vienna, his own early work is post-Wagnerian, only gradually moving into a more astringent musical language. He spent some years in Berlin, before enforced emigration to the United States of America, where he died in 1951. His work includes original and unexpected arrangements of the music of other composers, including a 1925 re-instrumentation of the Emperor Waltz.

SCHREKER, Franz (1878 – 1934)

The position of Franz Schreker in the music of the present century is now under re-assessment. He belongs to a generation of composers whose careers were stifled or ended by the political situation in Germany after 1933. Schreker's opera Der ferne Klang (The Distant Sound), the subject of a number of recent revivals and a first staging in England, is a remarkable work in its blend of the mystical and reality. Die Gezeichneten (The Sealed Ones) explores similar territory, of which the early Die Flammen gives a foretaste. A fuller picture of Schreker's achievement is given in his orchestral compositions.

SCHUBERT, Franz (1797 – 1828)

In his short life Schubert, a native of Vienna, wrote a considerable quantity of music of all kinds. His Wind Octet of 1813 survives only in fragmentary form but has been restored by modern scholars to make a viable work. Some of his many songs have been variously transcribed, including the well-known Serenade.

A man of some versatility, with interests that include literature and drama, Patrice Sciortino was trained at the Schola Cantorum in Paris, where he has subsequently served as professor of composition. His Sonances, first performed and recorded for Marco Polo, is a demanding work in which the solo instrument is contrasted with different sections of the orchestra until the final use of the full orchestra in a concluding summary.

SCOTT, Cyril (1879 – 1970)

A member of the so-called Frankfurt gang of British composers, Cyril Scott was a contemporary at the Hoch Conservatory of Percy Grainger, Balfour Gardiner and Roger Quilter. His pervading interest in theosophy had an effect on his career as a composer, which became subject to the vagaries of occult control. Remembered popularly for Lotus Leaves, Cyril Scott produced much weightier music in his symphonies and concertos and, in later years, in his chamber music. He was also distinguished as a pianist, and impressed the public in both capacities in performances of his own 1915 piano concerto.

Best known for his salon piece The Rustle of Spring, the Norwegian composer Sinding was trained at Leipzig Conservatory and returned home to win a solid reputation in Norway as a composer in the late Romantic style of the period. This is exemplified in his attractive piano trios, written in 1893 and 1902.

Frank Skinner made his career in Hollywood, largely in the service of Universal Studios. In collaboration with Hans Salter he produced a notable and important series of film-scores, often under extreme pressure. His musical background had been in dance-music, as a musician and arranger, his gifts proving an admirable foil to the work of the formally educated refugee from Nazi Germany, Salter.

SMETANA, Bedřich (1824 – 1884)

The leading Czech nationalist composer of his generation, Smetana is best known abroad for his opera The Bartered Bride and for his cycle of symphonic poems Ma Vlast (My Country). His eight other Czech operas are less frequently heard outside his own country, but can be sampled in orchestral excerpts. His Festive Symphony is an interesting earlier orchestral work which has not always proved acceptable because of the political connotations of one of its principal themes.

SPOHR, Louis (1784 – 1859)

Violinist, conductor and composer, Spohr enjoyed an early career as a virtuoso, later settling as director of music in Kassel, a position that had once been offered to Beethoven and later to Weber. Spohr's pedagogical works for the violin remain well known to students. Less familiar are his fine string quartets, of which he wrote some three dozen. His ten symphonies span a period from 1811 to 1857 and his fourteen violin concertos a similar length of time, from 1802 to 1844. These last include works well known to students of the violin, models of early nineteenth century concerto style. His instrumental works include virtuoso compositions for the clarinet, exemplified by the Variations on a Theme from the opera Alruna. For his wife, a distinguished harpist, he wrote concertos and duo sonatas, the latter for violin and harp, but apt for transcription, as here, for flute and harp.

Born in Dublin in 1852, Charles Villiers Stanford established himself in England as a leading figure in the musical life of the country, appointed professor of composition at the Royal College of Music in London at its foundation in 1883 and four years later elected to the chair of music at Cambridge. As a composer he was among the most influential in England in the second half of the nineteenth century, writing music in many genres, including a substantial body of organ music, reflecting in technique something of the formal training he had had as a student in Leipzig and Berlin. He also contributed considerably to the contemporary song repertoire, particularly in settings of poems from Ireland.

STERNEFELD, Daniel (1905 – 1986)

Daniel Sternefeld's music may often recall that of Mahler or of Richard Strauss in its expressive imagination and strength of feeling. His opera Mater Dolorosa is based on a story by Hans Andersen, dealing with a mother's struggle with death for the life of her child, for whom death in the end proves preferable. His Symphony No. 1, written in hiding in war-time Belgium, echoes the troubles of the day, while his tribute to Rossini strikes a much lighter note.

The Scottish composer, pianist and writer Ronald Stevenson was born in Blackburn in 1928 and studied at the Royal Manchester College of Music, later settling in Scotland, where he has devoted himself particularly to composition. His most remarkable work is the Passacaglia on DSCH, based on the notes representing the name of Shostakovich. The Passacaglia, which takes some eighty minutes to perform, demonstrates the breadth of his vision, his technical competence and the wide range of his musical imagination.

Born in Vienna in 1870, Oscar Straus studied with Max Bruch, but made his career in operetta and light music. Internationally he is known particularly for The Chocolate Soldier. He spent the war years abroad, returning to Germany in 1948, two years later providing music for the film La ronde, which won him even wider popularity. He wrote music for films, for ballet and above all for the light music theatre, with over forty operettas to his credit.

The older Johann Strauss, father of the later Viennese Waltz King, himself earned a similar title with his dance-orchestra that he set up in Vienna in 1825, the year of his oldest son's birth. In a much shorter life than that of his son Johann, he wrote a large quantity of waltzes, cotillions, galops, quadrilles, marches and polkas, establishing and adding substantially to a form of music that seemed to epitomize Vienna in the years after Napoleon.

STRAUSS, Josef (1827 – 1870)

Josef Strauss, the son of the first Johann Strauss and brother of the second composer of that name, was induced to join his elder brother in what had become an immensely successful family business, providing dance music for Vienna and much of the rest of Europe in what had become the family musical idiom. The complete project comprises 26 volumes.

Richard Strauss has an established position as a composer of symphonic poems such as Till Eulenspiegel and Also sprach Zarathustra and as a composer of operas. Less well known is his early Symphony in D minor, written in 1880, when he was sixteen, and before he had fallen under the influences of Wagner, and his 1884 Symphony in F minor.

SUCHON, Eugen (1908 – 1993)

Among the leading Slovak composers of his generation, Eugen Suchon enjoyed a successful career in Bratislava, holding a variety of important positions in academic and musical life. His Metamorphosis, variations on original themes, written in 1953, reflects some of the events in the history of the country, while the earlier Ballad Suite, completed in 1935, is influenced by the traditional music of Slovakia.

SULLIVAN, Arthur (1842 – 1900)

The fame of Sir Arthur Sullivan has largely depended on his collaboration with Gilbert in a series of operettas of continuing and institutionalised popularity. His reputation in his own time resulted rather from his eminence as a conductor, teacher and composer. An introduction to his orchestral music is provided by incidental music for the theatre and his ballet music.

SUPPÉ, Franz von (1819 – 1895)

Austrian, but Belgian by descent and born in Split, later to be a part of Yugoslavia, Franz von Suppé made his career principally in Vienna as a composer and conductor of operetta. Overtures to these are generally familiar, and include Poet and Peasant (Dichter und Bauer), Light Cavalry (Leichte Kavallerie), Fair Galatea (Die schöne Galatée) and Morning, Noon and Night in Vienna (Ein Morgen, ein Mittag und ein Abend in Wien). As a composer he also turned his attention to other musical forms, including symphonies, church music and string quartets, although this part of his work has been completely overshadowed by his lighter music for the theatre.

TANEYEV, Alexander Sergeyevich (1850 – 1918)

The nephew of Alexander Taneyev, Sergei Taneyev was a pupil of Tchaikovsky at the Moscow Conservatory and was the soloist at the first Moscow performance of Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto. He was distinguished as a teacher, his pupils including Rachmaninov and Scriabin. Taneyev had a precise mastery of compositional techniques, evident in his finely crafted symphonies.

TCHEREPNIN, Alexander (1899 – 1977)

The son of a well known Russian musician, Alexander Tcherepnin, pianist, conductor and composer, settled in France after the Russian Revolution. His compositions were influenced by his visits to China and Japan. In 1950 he moved, with his Chinese wife, to the United States. Tcherepnin's style is experimental, without being extravagantly so, its originality still based on his Russian heritage. This last is evident in his Russian Dances.

TCHEREPNIN, Nikolay (1873 – 1945)

Pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov in St Petersburg, Nikolay Tcherepnin distinguished himself as composer, pianist and conductor, in the last capacity conducting for Dyagilev the first Ballets Russes season in Paris, where his own ballet Le Pavillon d'Armide won success in 1911. Settling in Paris, he wrote music for Pavlova and continued as a composer combining fundamentally Russian inspiration with the influences of France.

THALBERG, Sigismund (1812 – 1871)

TOMASI, Henri (1901 – 1971)

The French composer Henri Tomasi won particular distinction for his work in the theatre, including a series of ballet-scores and operas. He follows the tradition of Ravel in his colourful orchestration, displayed, in particular, in a series of concertos and in music that reflects his own Corsican descent.

TORCH, Sidney (1908 – 1990)

Of Russian-Jewish origin, Sidney Torch established himself in England as a talented conductor of popular classics, notably with the BBC Concert Orchestra, and as a gifted composer and arranger, making imaginative and often novel use of the resources of the symphony orchestra. In Britain he will be remembered by many for his weekly broadcast Friday Night is Music Night.

TOURNEMIRE, Charles (1870 – 1939)

The name of Charles Tournemire is well enough known to organists. Less familiar are his symphonies, which represent another facet of his gifts and are, in their way, equally remarkable in the body of work left by a musician who set out to achieve for Catholic France what Bach had achieved for Lutheran Germany.

TOVEY, Donald Francis (1875 – 1940)

Sir Donald Tovey is remembered nowadays as a critic and teacher rather than as a composer, a strange neglect of a talent that at one time had seemed quite remarkable, from his days at Eton to Oxford, fruitful collaboration with Joachim and, in 1914, a professorship in Edinburgh, where he occupied a dominant position until his death, although his activities now deflected his attention from composition. His Cello Sonata was completed in 1900 and the Elegiac Variations were written in memory of Robert Hausmann, cellist in the Joachim Quartet.

TRIMBLE, Joan (1915 – 2000)

The daughter of musical parents, Joan Trimble studied in her native Ireland, before moving to London, where her sister Valerie was already a student. In her songs and other compositions Ireland is never far away. Her Phantasy Trio was entered in 1940, on the suggestion of Vaughan Williams, for the Cobbett Prize and was immediately followed by her Sonatina for two pianos.

TRUSCOTT, Harold (1914 – 1992)

Largely self-taught as a musician, Harold Truscott spent much of his life as a lecturer in music in Huddersfield. His compositions were largely neglected in his life-time, leading him to write very considerably for the piano and for chamber ensemble, where performance was more probable. He was, however, a natural orchestral composer, with a fine command of the resources of the orchestra, writing, as always, in an unfashionably approachable style, which can only now be appreciated.

TVEITT, Geirr (1908 – 1981)

The Norwegian composer Geirr Tveitt was trained in Leipzig, Vienna and Paris, before establishing himself in Norway as an important figure in the musical establishment of the country. His music is rooted in Norwegian folk-traditions, from which is compositions are never far removed. It was unfortunate that many of his unpublished works were lost in a fire, before his death in 1981.

The Russian composer and conductor Sergei Vasilenko studied with Grechaninov and Konyus, and later with Taneyev and Ippolitov-Ivanov, becoming, like Rachmaninov, conductor for the Mamontov Opera in the years before 1914. His marked interest in the exotic is reflected in his musical exploration of Central Asia and in his Chinese and Hindu Suites, works marked by colourful Russian orchestration.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Ralph (1872 – 1958)

Vaughan Williams was the outstanding English composer of the generation between that of Edward Elgar and that of Benjamin Britten. Quintessentially English in inspiration and often drawing on English folk-music, he nevertheless developed, particularly in his later symphonies, a less restricted style in a very varied range of music. Like others of his generation, he contributed to the music of the cinema with a number of very notable scores.

VELASQUEZ, Glauco (1884 – 1914)

The parentage of the Brazilian composer Glauco Velasquez was carefully concealed during his life-time and in subsequent biographical notices. He was, it seems, the illegitimate son of a notable singer in Rio de Janeiro and a woman of good family, who took refuge in Naples for the birth of her son and later "adopted" him, when he was brought back to Brazil. His style of composition is French rather than South American, echoing contemporary styles of writing in Paris.

VILLA-LOBOS, Heitor (1887 – 1959)

The leading composer of his native Brazil, Villa-Lobos became familiar with the varied music of his own country, from the streets of Rio de Janeiro to its remoter areas, the inspiration of much that he wrote. His Chôros, the name derived from the street-music of Rio, offer in various instrumental and vocal forms a conspectus of Brazilian music. His symphonic poems are less often heard abroad, as is his chamber music, including his seventeen string quartets. His suites Descobrimento do Brasil (Discovery of Brazil) give further lively examples of Brazilian tradition.

WAGNER, Siegfried (1869 – 1930)

The first son of Richard Wagner and grandson of Liszt, Siegfried Wagner, a pupil of Humperdinck after his father's death, turned from a proposed career as an architect to music after a voyage to the Far East in 1892. For the greater part of his life he was involved in the Bayreuth Festival. His compositions, including a number of operas, are not Wagnerian in subject or treatment, although he acknowledged his technical debt to his father in some respects. A number of his operas explore German fairy-story and legend, the world of the Brothers Grimm rather than that of the Nibelungen.

For the Val Lewton thrillers he provided score after score, including The Body Snatcher, famously starring Boris Karloff, the horror film Cat People with Simone Simon and the devil-worship of The Seventh Victim, all of them above the normal run of chillers and admirably enhanced by the music Webb provided.

WEBER, Carl Maria von (1786 – 1826)

One of the leading composers of German romanticism, Weber distinguished himself as a pianist, critic, conductor and composer. His best known work is the opera Der Freischütz, followed by the operas Euryanthe and Oberon, more generally known to modern audiences from their overtures. His early opera Peter Schmoll and His Neighbours was written in 1801-2 but failed in its first performance, in part through the ineptitude of Weber's father, whose activities added much complication to the life of the family. The work of a fifteen-year-old, Peter Schmoll is interesting in its own right, as it is the precursor of the first of German romantic operas. The opera Silvana is unusual in that the girl of the title remains largely mute throughout. His 1811 Adagio and Rondo for pairs of clarinets, French horns and bassoons, reflects his particular ability in idiomatic writing for wind instruments, exemplified in the same year in his clarinet concertos.

WELCHER, Dan (b. 1948)

Dan Welcher became composer-in-residence with the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra in 1990. Haleakalā is a tone-poem, with narration by Richard Chamberlain, recounting an early Polynesian legend. Prairie Light derives inspiration from three watercolours by the American painter Georgia O'Keeffe, while Welcher's Clarinet Concerto shows full awareness of the historical uses of the instrument, with its second movement Blues and acknowledgement of Benny Goodman.

WHITLOCK, Percy (1903 – 1946)

Regarded as one of the outstanding English organist-composers of his generation, Percy Whitlock is remembered nowadays for his organ and church music and for his significant additions to the repertoire of English light music, particularly as Borough Organist in the seaside resort of Bournemouth, where he also wrote entertaining music for the Municipal Orchestra.

WILSON, James (b. 1922)

Born in London, James Wilson settled after the war in Ireland, where he has established himself as a composer of originality, finding an audience there, in particular, as well as in Denmark, for music in an approachable idiom. The viola concerto Menorah commemorates the child victims of the Holocaust, Pearl and Unicorn is in essence a viola concerto, while his Concertino features a solo violin and solo cello in a transparent texture.

WOLF-FERRARI, Ermanno (1876 – 1948)

Born in Venice, Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari was divided in his genetic inheritance between his Italian mother and his painter father, the latter from a family of Bavarian origin. He studied in Rome and then in Munich and is widely remembered for his Italian comic operas of the first decade of the 20th century. Das Himmelskleid (The Garment of Heaven) is a very different work, more akin to German fairy-tale opera than his earlier Italian operas based on Goldoni. Here a fairy-tale princess sets her prince an impossible task, to find the Garment of Heaven, for which he searches the air, the Moon and the Sun. The true nature of his quest becomes apparent when he returns to rescue the princess from poverty and danger, brought on by her own wilfulness. Wolf-Ferrari's Sinfonia da camera, for eleven instruments, written in 1901, belongs to the German tradition of Schumann and his successors.

WORLAND, Bill (b. 1921)

Bill Worland has had long experience in the field of British light music, continuing to contribute to a repertoire that at one time seemed to be denied public performance. The 1990s, however, brought a revival of interest, to which he has been able to add.

XIAN, Xinghai (1909 – 1945)

Born in Macau, the son of a fisherman, Xian Xinghai was taken by his widowed mother to Singapore, where he studied before entering the Beijing Arts School. He was later a pupil of Vincent d'Indy in Paris, returning to China in 1935 and joining the Communist Party four years later. He spent the war years in Moscow, where he died in 1945. His epic Song of the Yellow River has for long enjoyed a place in popular patriotic Chinese repertoire.

ZHU, Jianer (b. 1922)

In common with many Chinese composers, Zhu Jianer was initially self-taught. In 1949 he started work with the Shanghai Film Company and for the Beijing Film Company. After study in Moscow, he returned, working for the Shanghai Opera Company and Symphony Orchestra. He later joined the staff of the Shanghai Conservatory. His symphonic fantasia The Hero's Monument is overtly patriotic in tone and is characteristic of his work.

ZIEHRER, Carl Michael (1843 – 1922)

The Austrian bandmaster C.M.Ziehrer belongs to the age of the Strauss brothers in Vienna, where he won a similar reputation with his dance orchestra, in which musicians had preferred his direction to that offered by Eduard Strauss. Ziehrer offers a series of polkas, waltzes, quadrilles and marches, all redolent of Vienna in its 19th century heyday.
