Brandenburg Concertos Nos 4 & 5

Ever since the advent of the LP in the 1950s with its expanded capacity, the six Brandenburg Concertos have been Bach's runaway hit. They were not written as a set but form a collection. Nos 4 and 5 are the brightest, the most buoyantly happy and the danciest, but in some ways they are also the most complex. Concerto No. 5 is also notably the first work to promote the harpsichord from its position as an accompanimental instrument to a virtuosic solo role. By putting these concertos under the musical microscope we can discover how their many ingredients combine to make two of the most irresistible works in the repertoire.
