American flag, folk artist, 1880s.

I find it essential to perform the music of young composers, even ones that are just starting out, and I try to separate my own likes or dislikes from the need to let everyone be heard. From the hundreds of scores I receive yearly, Carter Pann's stood out for their boldness and outrageousness. From the first glance, his orchestration technique seemed far advanced for someone still in school. What could be considered derivative musical ideas at first hearing, or even imitative, on further acquaintance appear well-planned, distilled through the composer's special voice. The frequent quotes of other composers take on a rather different light as seen through the eyes of Carter Pann, and the recurring and sudden changes of styles produce a different effect from those of one of his teachers, the brilliant American composer William Bolcom.
