Tchaikovsky’s songs represent a little-known but highly characteristic facet of his musical personality. In all he composed over 100 songs, most of which are set to poetic texts about the problems of emotional entanglement. Tchaikovsky takes these often sentimental verses and transforms them into miniatures, investing in them all his skill as an operatic composer.